K-Mart Drop on September 30, 2006

It seems every K-mart had there own way of doing things this time, but it seems like all the cases were distributed giving everyone an opportunity to get some new cars. From the people that reported to me about how many cases there were at each store seemed to be equally distributed giving 24 cases to each K-mart. At the 21st Street store this time they called two people's tickets at the same time and had each person sit in a chair at a table across from an employee that would then open the case. The cars were pulled out by twos passing a group to one person then the other until the entire case was emptied, so in other words what ever cars you got is what you got. The only chance you had at getting anything else was to find someone you could trade cars with. It was interesting, but seemed to go off without having a lot of yelling or disappointed people. Maybe next time we will get an entire case to go through of our own. There were a lot of new cars or repaints on new cards. Here is the exclusive cars for this time:

A WORD FROM KAZMAN

Greetings! Have you had a chance to grab some of the 2007 cars yet?

It appears that Mattel has a few new tricks up their sleeves with several new twists designed to make collecting a little more interesting for the collector during the next year.

They have settled on 36 new models for 2007 and will probably crank out several per case when they first come out to make them reasonably attainable. They also have 24 Code cars coming out which will have codes printed on the bottom which can be used to unlock goodies online. I think that these cars are more designed for the kids out there.

Then you have 12 Track Stars cars and 12 Teams (or segments cars) each coming out monthly. The segments series will include 4 cars per month. These are both continuations of what Hot Wheels has been doing for some time, with the Track cars designed for those that line to open and run them down the track and the segments more designed for the collector types out there.

Then we will get to see 24 All Stars cars which should be more to the collectors liking as it will include the Purple Passion and the 67 GTO among the list of cars they will rework during 2007.

The most interesting changes to the lineup include the 24 Mystery cars, which they have recently included in both Toys R Us and Kmart cases. These cars, which you have probably seen, include blacked out blister packs so you cannot see what is inside. They supposedly have a code, which will tell you what is inside, but I foresee several problems popping up with opened blisters, returned and switched out cars among the issues to come up with this segment.

Last but not least you have the 12 Treasure Hunts, each of which will have a "Super" Treasure Hunt variation, which will have Real Riders on them. This compares to the regular T-hunt variation, which will have a one-piece wheel. Not sure if this is really doing the collector a favor as it is going to be tough to get them all. It is hard enough to try to get all 12 now!

All in all it looks to be an exciting, interesting and frustrating year for the collector in 2007.

Good luck hunting!
Kaz
